The surest way to start the "revival of business" is to take on a full head of confidence in your neighbors, let go of your prepossessions and advertise in The Ledger. If Maysville people and Maysville merchants will do this, there will be no more cause for "crocking" in this community.

The Shoe Factory begins now to look like a fact. The wheels are going round, the cutters are busy preparing stock, a number of the machines are in place ready for operators, and Superintendent Brody expects to begin manufacture in a few days. Everything has an air of business about it, and the way is paved for the most thorough systemizing of the entire establishment. Here's for success to this initial enterprise; may it be the forerunner of many others.

WILLIAM C. WOOD.

Death Last Night of This Estimable Young Gentleman.

Though not entirely unexpected, the announcement that William C. Wood was dead caused genuine sorrow throughout the city.

He had been quite ill with typhoid fever for three weeks, but it was not until Thursday morning that the physicians abandoned hope.

From that time he sank rapidly, and at 9:30 o'clock last night his spirit returned to the God who gave it.

William Coburn Wood, eldest son of Dr. and Mrs. J. James Wood, was born in this city 37 years ago.

After completing his education he entered the Louisville College of Pharmacy, graduating in March, 1888, with high honors, and for the past few months he has, practically, had charge of his father's extensive business.

The bereaved parents and the sorrowing brothers and sisters have the consolation that the entire community mourns with them.

Willie Wood, as he was familiarly called, was, in the fullest sense, a gentleman. A dutiful son, an affectionate brother, an exemplary citizen, the friend of all and the enemy of none, he has left an impression on this community that will be felt for good in the years that are to come.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, Forest avenue, at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, services by the Rev. W. O. Cochrane. All friends invited. Burial private.
